At the Field Museum, more than 150 scientists and researchers seek out new discoveries and clues about the diverse life that makes Earth home. They travel to every continent and ocean to collect specimens and knowledge they bring back to one remarkable place. All in service of our mission to connect all of us to the natural world and the human story.

COLLECTIONS & RESEARCH

The Negaunee Integrative Research Center and Gantz Family Collections Center are at the leading edge of scientific research. Both centers rely on the Museum's more than 40 million artifacts and specimens—only 1% of which are on public display—to answer fundamental questions about our planet, its life, and its cultures.

EXHIBITIONS & EDUCATION

The Field Museum is driven by a passion for learning and educating. The Museum partners with educators and schools in innovative ways to expand teaching and deepen learning experiences, from field trips to our Museum by thousands of students annually, opportunities to bring our collection into the classroom, and professional development programs for teachers pre-K through high school.

CONSERVATION

Field Museum staff work across the globe to bring people and nature together by conserving the natural world and providing resources to build vibrant communities. The Museum's efforts help governments protect more than 30 million acres of wilderness across the globe, while our work in the Chicago region focuses on environmental programs that bring people and nature together.
